

Photojournalist-Style Wedding Photography for 2009
(5/09)

It's your special day - family and guests have all arrived and are waiting for the bride and groom to tie the knot! You've made arrangements down to the last detail: the rings, the flowers, the decorations, the cake, the music, the menu.

You want to document your wedding - but you want someone who is going to go to the extra effort to make their presence as low-key as possible. No flash in the church. No corralling of the wedding party and immediate family for hours. No forcing groups into the same poses over and over at the reception.

Edward Hahn is pleased to offer this kind of low-impact photojournalist-style photography, to sophisticated clients who want their day to be captured with more subtlety. While he will happily take the portraits you want to capture for your wedding album, his best work is done wandering among the guests and capturing them in authentic celebration of your big day.

Ed will produce photographs - at your option - in color, black and white, or in a mix of the two. He also offers several print options, as well as a digital-image-only option that allows you to have full access to all images, now and forever in the future, including full rights to make prints for relatives and friends.

Here are some example packages for your consideration - additional prints can be added at the time of order.
